

SINGULAR ORNAMENT.

A brooch worn by the Countess of K— has recently been the subject of comment among the eminent company of Polish nobility who are now exiles in Paris. Encircled by twenty brilliants upon a dark blue ground of lampas lazuli, and protected by a glass in front, may be seen—what? A portrait? A lock of hair? No, neither the one nor the other; but only four bent pins wrought together in the form of a star. The history of this singular ornament is contained in the following communication: "The Count K— was, some years ago, in his own country, suspected of being too much inclined to politics, and was, consequently, one night, without examination or further inquiry, torn from the bosom of his family by police officers, conveyed to a fortress in the distant part of the country, and thrown into a damp, dark dungeon— Days, weeks, months passed away without his being brought to trial. The unhappy man saw himself robbed of every succor. In the stillness of the grave he felt not only his strength failing him but also his mind wandering. An unspeakable anguish took hold of him. He, who feared not to appear before his judges, now trembled before himself. Conscious of his danger, he endeavored to find something to relieve himself from the double misery of illness and loneliness, and thus preserve him from a terrible insanity. Four pins, which accidentally happened to be in his coat, had fortunately escaped the notice of his jailer. Those were to be the means of deliverance to his spirit. He threw the pins upon the earth—which alone was the floor of his gloomy dungeon—and then employed himself in seeking for them in the darkness. When, after a tiresome search, he succeeded in finding them, he threw them down anew; and so, again and again did he renew his voluntary task. All the day long, sitting, lying, or kneeling, he grubbed about with hands until he had found the pins which he had intentionally scattered. This fearful, yet beneficial, recreation continued for six years. Then, at last, a great political event opened suddenly the doors of his prison. The count had just scattered the pins, but he would not leave his cell without taking with him his little instruments of his own preservation from despair and madness. He soon found them, for now the clear bright light of day beamed in through the doorway of his dungeon. As the count related this sad story to the countess she seized the pins with holy eagerness. Those crooked yellow brass pins, which, during six fearful years, had been scattered and gathered alternately, were become to her as precious reliquies; and now, set in a frame of brilliants, worth £400, as a treasure of much greater value, she wears them on her bosom.—Court Journal.

With the multitude of business every person has to do, how can people complain of being distressed for something to pass the time. Besides private affairs to conduct, or oversee; children to form to wisdom and virtue; the distressed to relieve; the unthinking to advise; friends and country to serve; their own passions to conquer, their minds to furnish with knowledge, virtue and religion; a whole eternity's happiness to provide for.

A Scotch gentleman, lately returned from the Island of Saints, describes Ribbonman as "a man w^t no grotti til his hat and has seat til his brook, w^t a cutty pipe stickit out at one end o' him, and the tail o' his shirt at the other."

Togore, the famous Calcutta merchant, died of a broken heart because his fortune, during the panic of '47, was reduced to ten millions of dollars. Poor fellow!

Buy your shirts and buy your fancyings,

Buy your caps and buy your capacious,

Buy your stockings and buy your little,

Buy as high as you steppin,

Or as low as is the layout,

All goods sold at low or lower than the lowest;

Retail dealer in this region,

Buy as well as traps and plunder,

Get as much as you can get,

Marks he is as who can provide,

His own gold white, his own stomach hooker,

Boots and shoes for gents and Indian,

Children and youth and little babies,

Marks low, and it's to be sold 'em

Children and youth and little babies,

Who can only barely, waddle,

While he'll just get up and kiddle."

Work to winleap of the squadron,

For he carries plies of canvas,

And I'm a mite of a midget,

Come along and wear your marks,

For gods that come even Goderich,

This's the route to bring you freight on,

Always sound and always certain,

Across the raging Huron,

But the fact of navigation,

Like a boat on the beach,

Likes her owners and her captain,

And his likes every package,

Every box is every barrel,

That comes to you, most truly,

But the machine is quite sturdy,

But I'll show my whale and

Suit off.
